REPORT ON WORLD POPULATION DAY 2025

Organized by: National Service Scheme (NSS Unit)

Date: 11th July 2025

Venue: Godavari College of Nursing, Jalgaon

INTRODUCTION

World Population Day is observed globally on 11th July each year to raise awareness about the pressing issues arising from rapid population growth and its impact on health, environment, and development. The day serves as a reminder to address challenges such as poverty, reproductive health, maternal and child well-being, and sustainable resource management. In alignment with this objective, the National Service Scheme (NSS) Unit of Godavari College of Nursing, Jalgaon organized an informative and thought-provoking program, aiming to educate students and the community on the importance of population control and health awareness.

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

The event began with an inaugural address by the NSS Programme Officer, who emphasized the theme "A Healthy Population is a Foundation for a Sustainable Future." Faculty members, NSS volunteers, and students gathered in large numbers to actively participate in the two key activities planned for the day: a Health Awareness Program and an Essay Writing Competition.

The Health Awareness Program focused on educating participants about the importance of reproductive health, family planning, contraception, maternal care, and the role of population control in promoting national development. NSS volunteers and faculty presented key health messages using posters, charts, and interactive discussions. Special attention was given to addressing myths related to contraception and empowering women through informed reproductive choices. The session also highlighted the significance of youth participation in spreading population-related awareness.

In the second half of the program, an Essay Writing Competition was conducted for students. Topics such as "Population Growth and Sustainable Development" and "The Role of Youth in Controlling Population Explosion" were given to encourage critical thinking and creativity. The competition received enthusiastic participation from students across all batches. Essays were evaluated based on originality, content clarity, relevance to the theme, and presentation. The winning entries were appreciated by the faculty and announced at the end of the program.

CONCLUSION

The observance of World Population Day at Godavari College of Nursing was a successful and impactful initiative. It not only deepened the understanding of population-related challenges among the students but also strengthened their sense of social responsibility as future healthcare professionals. The activities organized under the NSS banner reflected the core values of awareness, empowerment, and community engagement. The college remains committed to organizing such meaningful events that contribute toward building a healthier, educated, and more sustainable society. The program also reaffirmed the NSS motto, "Not Me, But You," by encouraging collective responsibility toward national development and public health awareness.
